

Tribune-Review fishing report

By Bob Frye

TRIBUNE-REVIEW OUTDOORS EDITOR

Friday, April 10, 2009

- Anglers fishing the Allegheny River near the mouth of Bull Creek had been catching walleyes, some reportedly as large as 12 pounds, up until a week or so ago, said Matt DeMichele of Allegheny Bait and Tackle in Tarentum. The fish had been hitting jigs and minnows.
- The bad weather -- including snow -- has slowed the fishing considerably at places like Yough Dam, said Scott Gates of S&S Bait and Tackle in Chalk Hill.
- The crappie action has been picking up on Crooked Creek Lake, though. According to Fish and Boat Commission reports, anglers have been getting some decent-sized fish around fallen trees.
- Anglers fishing Cross Creek Lake with Mini Foo jigs and fatheads minnows have been getting some crappies recently.
- The Ohio River gave up a very nice musky recently, according to Wayne Lykens of Island Firearms. The fish, caught near the mouth of Big Sewickley Creek, weighed more than 32 pounds and stretched more than 45 inches. It was released back into the river.
- The delayed harvest section of Buffalo Creek has been giving up trout to anglers tossing spinners and nymphs.
- The cold weather has kept many anglers off the water at Lake Arthur, but those venturing out have been getting crappies on small and medium fatheads and wax worms, according to Ron Anderson of Appalachian Trails in Prospect.
- At Lake Erie, some fresh steelhead are providing action in the tributary streams. Fish and Boat Commission reports say that a fair number of the smaller "jack" steelhead have moved into the access area on Elk Creek up to and around the first bend by the boat launch.
- Anglers started fishing Lake Wilhelm again Thursday with a break in the weather, and were getting a few crappies on minnows and maggots, said Bob Mohra of Fergie's Bait and Tackle in Sandy Lake.
- Acme Dam has been giving up a few small bass and some crappies, but there's been little fishing pressure there overall, said John Dressler of Red's Bait Shop in Acme.
- Maggots and minnows have been the best baits for catching crappies lately at Glendale Lake, according to a spokesman at Shomo's Gun Shop and Sporting Goods in Fallentimber. One 2.3-pound crappie was caught recently. A few northern pike are also being caught.

- Greenlick Dam has seen a few fishermen in recent days, too, but there's been no word yet on catches.

Bob Frye can be reached at bfrye@tribweb.com or 724-838-5148.