

WELCOME TO ROCKWOOD

Rockwood is a tight-knit rural community whose history is rooted in industry and railroading. While the town was laid out in 1857, it did not boom until the end of the Civil War and the introduction of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad which passed through town.

By 1884, the town contained several mills and shops, four general stores, two grocery stores and even four hotels.

As you reach the Rockwood trailhead the locomotive sculpture that greets you pays homage to Rockwood's rail history as well as its present-day investment in biking and recreation (the steam cloud is fashioned from bike rims). A bike shop and two B&Bs are conveniently located close to the trail. Lynn Sanner at the bike shop is always eager to help you out.

The town of Rockwood is just across the Casselman River. Follow Water Street to Main Street, and on the way notice more public art, a mural that honors the town's heritage and the legendary Maynard Sembower who passed away at age 100 in 2009.

The Rockwood Mill Shoppes & Opera House on Main Street houses a café, pizza shop, several retail shops, and a second-floor performance space. Lumber and feed were processed here for nearly a century, with an opera house that hosted visiting and local performers above the mill. The building was restored in 2000 and added to the National Register of Historical Places.

Don't end your visit at this landmark building. Other town offerings include a hostel, B&Bs, guesthouse, campground, antique store and the restaurants.

LOCAL EVENTS

National Train Day Celebration May 7, 2011

When steam locomotives were in their heyday, Rockwood was the "Railroad Center of Somerset County." Today, the town celebrates its railroading heritage by joining in nationwide National Train Day celebrations with a community-wide festival featuring children's activities, train-related exhibits, bike rides, great food, special entertainment, craft vendors, and much more. It is held the Saturday before Mother's Day each year.

New Centerville Farmers' & Threshermen's Jubilee September 7-11, 2011

Come and join us for an old-fashioned country event, just 3 miles from Rockwood. Events include a large display of antique farming equipment, pulling contests, on-stage entertainment, a beautiful quilt show and a large variety of craft items. An assortment of good food will also be available. For more information please call 814-926-3142.
