Basics:

Location:

Southside Flats and Oakland, Pittsburgh

Official

Monongahela Connecting Railroad Bridge

Name:

(Mon Con RR) & Hot Metal Bridge

Type:

Steel Truss

Length:

1,052 feet

Width:

14 feet (Bike/Ped Bridge)

Year Built:

1887

Year

2000 (roadway-Mon Con RR)

Refurbished:

2007 (pedestrian-Hot Metal)

Cost:

$12,000,000 (Mon Con RR)

$11,600,000 (Hot Metal)

This unique industrial relic has been re-purposed to provide a bike, pedestrian, and vehicular connection across the Monongahela River between the Southside and the Oakland neighborhoods.

Key Details:

There are actually two bridges which share piers, making it appear as though it is one bridge. The east structure was constructed as a railroad bridge. The west side was built to carry crucibles of molten steel from blast furnaces on the north side of the river to processing mills on the south side, hence providing its namesake.

If You Go:

The Hot Metal Bridge is near a number of South Side attractions including the new infill South Side Works as well as the established Carson Street entertainment area. Across the river is a number of new research buildings and the continuation of the Three Rivers Heritage Trail.
