

Brighton Township's Great Path

Brighton Township's primary thoroughfare, Tuscarawas Road, closely follows a former Native American trail, The Great Path, which led from the forks of the Ohio to the Tuscarawas Valley and Central Ohio. In successive campaigns, beginning with Colonel Bouquet in 1763 (who camped near Dawson Ridge), armies moving westward followed the trail.

One of Bouquet's engineers took note of the "luxuriant grass and fine drinking water in the branching stream that refreshed the animals." In 1778, the site of today's Seven Oaks Country Club was a point of rest and refuge for General Lachlan McIntosh and his troops during the American Revolution
